A Time of Gathering is an exhibition by the Burke Museum on the heritage of Indigenous Native Americans in Washington. Named and blessed by Indian people, it is being designed and created with the constant and extensive assistance of Native American employees, contractors, and volunteers. Tribes are helping identify the thousands of objects, originally from what is now Washington, located in museums around the world. In the process, tribal people are learning of the existence of artifacts not seen by them for well over a hundred years. As part of the exhibit, Indian artists are fashioning art work for display. Makah and Yakima craftsmen are building full-size dwellings for inclusion in the exhibit.

“Celebrate Washington” - Quilt Exhibit
Featured will be forty quilts made to honor the state centennial, reflecting the beauty, commerce, culture, and history of the state. They were selected from a juried exhibit sponsored by the Washington State Federation of Women’s Clubs. Following the opening exhibit at the Marriott Hotel in April 1989, the quilts will be available for display to qualified agencies in the state throughout the remainder of the centennial year. Quilters throughout the state have been invited to participate in the exhibit. Our goal is to produce a “museum quality” collection of historically significant quilts honoring the state of Washington.

"Crossroads of Continents: Archaeology of the Beringian Region" - Lecture
For many years, it has been supposed that the first people to move into North America passed over the ancient land bridge that joined Siberia and the American continent at the end of the Ice Age. Yet archaeological evidence may not support this belief.
During this provocative lecture, William Fitzhugh explores current and past theories on how man arrived in the New World and shares recent discoveries that may lead scientists to new conclusions.
