One of Washington's most prominent suffragists, May Arkwright Hutton, is illustrated here with a sassy expression and brandishing a megaphone which are consistent with what we know of May's character and political approach to winning suffrage. The double pickax print on her shirt speaks to her background in silver mining, which elevated her and her husband from rags to riches. Does the zebra print and flamboyant hat help you to imagine her larger-than-life personality? May became the vice-president of the Washington Equal Suffrage Association, and with president Emma Smith DeVoe worked to win suffrage for Washington women in 1910.
