

COLUMBIA

THE MAGAZINE OF NORTHWEST HISTORY

Writer's Guidelines

COLUMBIA is a journal of popular history edited for the general public as opposed to the scholarly one, with the intent of inviting readership through clear, easily followed writing and interesting illustrations. Brevity is valued. The geographic focus of the magazine is on Washington, but its coverage includes all of what was originally the Oregon Country. The topical scope is equally broad. Biographical portraits and articles on modern-day phenomena are all welcome.

The preferred article is one that will be of interest to the whole state or region, not merely a single locality. The best in local history, which may well be accepted for publication, is that which is grounded in the broad pattern of state, regional, and, on occasion, national history. "Articles" based on a coherent series of photographic or other images (paintings, drawings, etc.) are especially welcome. In a similar vein, museums are encouraged to view COLUMBIA as an outlet for publicizing first-rate exhibitions and related scholarship.

Stylistically, articles should be footnoted, if applicable, but few if any of these citations will be included in the published version to keep faith with COLUMBIA's popular orientation. Authors will be responsible for identifying and, in many cases, providing suitable illustrative material and procuring permissions as needed. COLUMBIA will use the utmost care in protecting and preserving original graphics and photographic prints but will not accept responsibility for accidental loss or damage.

An expression of interest by COLUMBIA in a potential article is not a commitment to publish. The magazine, operating on limited funds, will pay authors a token honorarium of $50 upon publication plus two issues of the magazine in which the author's article appears. (The author may purchase up to 10 additional copies at a 40 percent discount.)

While COLUMBIA does accept unsolicited manuscripts, the editor prefers an advance query, preferably by e-mail.

Submission Pointers

- Manuscripts average about 4,000 words (16 double-spaced pages). Maximum word count is about 5,000.
- A cover sheet or letter must include the author's name, address, phone number, and e-mail address, plus a short biographical statement about the author. Published articles will also require a headshot of the author.
- Hard copy or digital submissions are both acceptable. The editors prefer to receive text files in MS Word format and high resolution image files in JPEG format.
- Manuscript margins should be about one inch on all sides and include page numbers.
- The text should be double-spaced and appropriately footnoted (even though footnotes are rarely published) or accompanied by a complete bibliography. We encourage authors to include a list of three or four "suggested reading" items—preferably books or articles—to accompany the article should it be accepted for publication.
- A submission accompanied by images and/or illustrations has a better chance of success. At the very least, the author should include a list of image possibilities and sources.
- Authors who want their submission materials returned should include a self-addressed envelope with adequate postage for that purpose.
- We edit in accord with the Chicago Manual of Style, 16th edition, and Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, 11th edition.
- E-mail digital submissions to: editor.columbia@gmail.com. Mail hard copy submissions to: Editor, COLUMBIA Magazine, 1911 Pacific Avenue, Tacoma, WA 98402.
- Authors receive an e-mail acknowledgment when their submission has been received.
- The review process may take up to four weeks. Once the process is complete, an editor will contact the author to report the outcome.
- Because COLUMBIA is only published quarterly, it may take 12 to 18 months for an article to be published once it is accepted. The exception to this is a timely article touching on the historic commemoration of a past event.
